BROOKLYN'S SHAME.

Who Is Responsible for Starving the Imprisoned Families?

MORE INEFFICIENCY SHOWN.

Now the Quarantine is Raised and the People Set Free.

DECLARED TO BE DANGEROUS.

Are Prevarication and Incompetency the only Features of the Department?

We, the undersigned, tenants of 155 Prospect street, who have been under quarantine and reduced almost to starvation and subjected to unbearable abuse by the Board of Health of Brooklyn, desire to express our thanks to "The Evening World" for its timely relief.

Mrs. Annie Koehler.
Mrs. August Mangold.
Mrs. Katie Vetter.
Frederick Scheerer.
Mrs. Ida M. Hayden.
Mrs. Dooley.
Mrs. A. B. Kelley.
Mrs. Kelly.
Mrs. Farrell.
Mrs. P. Farrell.
Ed Walsh.

That remarkable Brooklyn Health Department, which quarantined thirty-four people at 155 Prospect street and left them to starve until "The Evening World" exposed the almost criminal negligence and sent a wagon load of provisions to relieve their sufferings, today by raising the quarantine, sending the policemen away and setting the inmates of the infected house at liberty.

Dr. O'Grady was the instrument of the Department that guards the health of Brooklyn in this matter.

He came along at 10 o'clock this morning, spent half an hour in an "inspection" of the house, and, on emerging, said he "guessed it was all right," and told the policemen they might go away.

The quarantine had lasted seven days. It frequently takes three weeks for small-pox to develop in the patient, and it never develops within ten days after exposure to the contagion.

In every city where there is a properly constituted health department a house in which the pest has appeared is closely quarantined for at least three weeks.

In the Prospect street case, the tenants expelled last Saturday may develop small-pox any time in the next two weeks.

We would not deem it at all safe to raise the quarantine for small-pox in less than three weeks," said a member of New York's Health Department today. "I think that perhaps our Brooklyn friends may have cause to regret their joy in the case of the Prospect street tenement, but of course it would be indicative for me to criticize them, and I decline to permit the use of my name."

discovered by "The Evening World." It first loaded up a wagon with provisions—the very best of the kind in the market—and enough to feed all these people, big and little, young and old, for three days at least.

GROUP IN THE DOORWAY OF THE QUARANTINED HOUSE.

While one set of reporters were delivering this provision for the starving people, another set was striving diligently to find out who in the names of all the gods in America, was to blame for this awful neglect. For some of the men that gathered in the doorway of the quarantined house and told their woes were gaunt and hollow-eyed and husky, with an emphasis that they said had been complete for three days, and some of the little children were that pined look about the nose that told too plainly of their suffering.

The men with the wagon had a hard time of it delivering the goods, as was related in yesterday's "Evening World," for they were met with stubborn opposition by the police and the Health authorities, who, in spite of the pleading of the hungry people in the building, the cries of "shame! shame!" from the gathering of neighbors in the street and the arguments of the newspaper men, absolutely refused to let the reporters place the provisions on the quarantine line, where the inmates of the house could get them.

The only reasons given were:
By the Police—The Board of Health will look after these people.
By the Health Officers—Capt. Eason has supplied all their wants.

POLICE CAPT. EASON.

The order came for just such goods as were in "The Evening World" relief wagon. The wagon was unloaded at Haviland's, and Manager C. A. Thompson, who knew the real situation at the quarantined house, volunteered to fill Mrs. Kelly's order from the relief wagon and deliver the goods with a receipted bill.

This was done, the little wagon distributing prevented the race from being brought into as much prominence as when the bets of the plunders and the public were reported daily.

What Can Excuse This?
But the work of the men with the wagon was easily compared with that of finding out who was to blame for starving these people.

After wrestling with the question for several hours the reporters were obliged to report that either all of the officers connected with the case were awful prevaricators or else nobody at all.

It is not pleasant to say so, but the reporter investigating committee felt constrained to report that the former was the case, and that the responsibility for the situation at 155 Prospect street was numbered down to four of Brooklyn's salary receivers.

HANDICAP STARTERS. IS HE A MURDERER?

All Ready for the Great Race at Gravesend Monday.

History of the Competitors, Their Form and Records.

Lampighter Looks to Have the Best Chance to Win.

The race for the rich Brooklyn Handicap stakes, this year worth $20,000 to the victorious thoroughbred, will be run on Monday over the Brooklyn Jockey Club's course at Gravesend. While it is not probable that over ten horses will go to the post, the event will still be most interesting to the lovers of the sport. Those who will face the starter are the best horses in all America, and the struggle for the rich stakes will be a bitter one from start to finish.

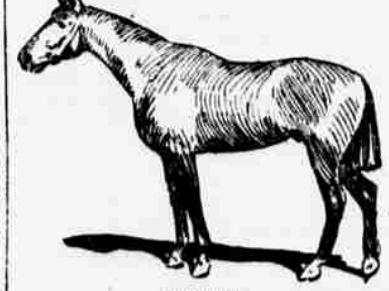

LAMPIGHTER.

Handicap day has been likened to Derby day in England. Across the water few men, or women, for that matter, allow themselves to be cheated out of a peep at the Derby. Thousands upon thousands witness the running of that great event, and they come from all parts of England. In this country the admission fee no doubt keeps away many who would dearly love to see the struggle of the grand thoroughbreds, but nevertheless the grounds of the Jockey Club are generally crowded to their utmost capacity.

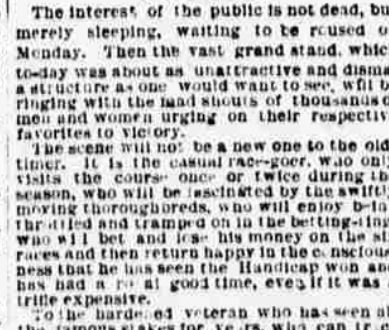

RACKLAND.

As many as 25,000 people have visited some of the great races in this country and it is not surprising that the attendance will not fall far short of that mark on Monday.

BANQUER.

No books were made, and this naturally prevented the race from being brought into as much prominence as when the bets of the plunders and the public were reported daily.

JUDOK MORROW.

The interest of the public is not dead, but merely sleeping, waiting to be roused on Monday. Then the vast grand stand, which today was about as unattractive and dismal a structure as one would want to see, will be swarming with the hundreds of thousands of men and women urging on their respective favorites to victory.

William Flannely Charged with Killing Pretty Mary Sexton.

They Had Lived Together and He Threatened to Leave Her.

He Claims She Shot Himself After Wounding Him in the Arm.

A lover's quarrel on the third floor of the double tenement 222 Chrystie street, known as the "Three Deuces," shortly after midnight this morning resulted in the death of pretty, nineteen-year-old Mary Sexton, a trail frequenter of Bowery dives, and the police believe that she was murdered.

Capt. Devery, of the Kidder street station, has in his custody William Flannely, Mary's lover, who ruined her young life two years ago, when both were neighbors in Jersey City. He had been living with her in the "Three Deuces" for the past month and quarreled with her last night.

The police are confident that Flannely shot her down in cold blood while her plump arms were clasped about his neck in a desperate attempt to restrain him from his expressed intention of abandoning her.

Flannely, who is twenty-three and says he is a driver, although the police say he did no work, but lived on the earnings of pretty Mary's degradation, walked into the Ivy Concert Hall, a dive kept by Joseph Buttner at 24 Bowery, about 10 o'clock last night, and said to the bartender, Joseph Buttner: "Is my girl here?"

"Yes," replied Buttner, "She's in the back room. Do you want to see her?" "No," said Flannely, "I'm going to leave her. I'm sick of this business."

Then he gave the keys to the two rooms he and Mary occupied in Chrystie street to Buttner and told him to give them to Mary Kelly, the bookkeeper at the Ivy Lodge House, near Hudson street, where Mary would call.

Butler did as requested, before Flannely departed, however, Mary came out of Buttner's and saw Flannely standing in the street. She went out and saw him, and he said to her: "I've got a gun with me. I'm going to shoot you."

She was also a habitué of the low den at 3 West First street, and was known to the people who lived there. She was a beautiful brunette, and her beauty had not yet been destroyed by the dissipation of the life upon which she had entered. Neither had her plump yet graceful figure wasted away, and she had many admirers.

Annie Frank, the housekeeper at 222 Chrystie street, had this morning that she rented the two rooms where the tragedy occurred to Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy, April 30. She had never seen McCarthy, however, as he came in late at night and went away early. She says that McCarthy declared her husband was "too handsome to work."

Flannely's relatives of both Flannely and his victim have been notified by the police. Mary's dead body will lay in her room this morning awaiting the action of the coroner.

Either from an inborn disposition to wander or from dissatisfaction with his quarters, Fox, a handsome collier dog, belonging to Henry D. Hilton, son of ex-Judge Hilton, left his home in Mr. Hilton's stables, at 155 West Fifty-third street, last Thursday night, for an excursion to the city. The dog was seen by a porter of the Plaza Hotel, who caught him at Third street, and he was taken to his owner, Mr. Hilton, who lives at 155 West Fifty-third street.

QUARANTINED

CAPT. EASON—"I don't let anybody give out alms in my precinct if I can help it."

Detective Kiernan, after an investigation, thinks Mary tried to prevent him from leaving her, but that he shot her while she was trying to throw up his left arm in trying to keep her away.

The police are confident that Flannely has a record in Jersey City, where he has a brother who is a police sergeant in the Second Precinct.

According to Annie Kelly, the young woman in the Ivy Lodge House, Flannely's victim, left her home in Jersey City six months ago to avoid arrest for robbing a man, and became a frequenter of Bowery resorts.

She was also a habitué of the low den at 3 West First street, and was known to the people who lived there. She was a beautiful brunette, and her beauty had not yet been destroyed by the dissipation of the life upon which she had entered.

BOSTON, May 13.—The building laborers' unions have decided that, unless the master builders of the city and surrounding towns grant their demands recently presented, between 1,500 and 2,000 building laborers will strike early next week.

When working nine hours per day they received $2.25. When the eight-hour system was adopted, the rate of wages was reduced to a standard of $2 per day, or 25 cents per hour. They demand 30 cents an hour, or $2.40 per day.

PIGOT'S JURY OUT.

Now Deliberating in the First Columbian Scandal Trial.

Judge Moore Charged the Jury Early This Morning.

The Defense Outlines Points on Which to Base an Acquittal.

The jury in the trial of Plan Clerk James H. Pigot, of the Building Department, who is charged with presenting a false and fraudulent bill for $11,400 for erecting the Alderman Grand Stand at the Park Plaza during the Columbian celebration, retired from the Brooklyn Court of Sessions at 9.27 o'clock this morning.

When court opened at 9 o'clock there were not more than seventy-five people in the room, many of the "regulars" thinking that the case would be taken up at 10 o'clock, the usual hour for opening the court.

As soon as District Attorney Higway arrived Judge Moore began his charge. In the course of his remarks he said: "It is something very unusual that a jury is in this court on Saturday morning. I always endeavor to get through Friday night, but I thought better to have you come here today than to keep you over into another week."

"This case is of a great deal of importance. It has been alleged that the city has been cheated by the defendant out of a large amount of money. He denies it. He has been on trial here and in a few moments the case will be under your consideration.

We all know the subject of expenditures attending the Columbian celebration has been discussed among the people and in the newspapers. The fact that men made up their minds in regard to the matter is shown by the examination of jurors. Whether the money was properly or improperly expended, you cannot convict the defendant unless he is guilty of the specific crime charged in the indictment.

"It is not responsible for the expenditure of the money. If the city authorities have been derelict he cannot be held responsible for their acts. If they have been criminally derelict let them be punished. If he has presented a false bill then he must be convicted, but on no other charge.

"When a man puts a man on trial for alleged crime it must prove the charge beyond reasonable doubt. If any doubt exists he is entitled to acquittal. It is my duty to instruct you as to the law, and you must be guided by the instructions of the Court. On questions of fact you are the sole judges.

"There are three counts in the indictment, each charging the same offense, but in slightly different form. The indictment charges that the defendant aided and abetted in the presentation of a false and fraudulent bill, that the bill was false, that it was a check, that the price charged was greatly in excess of what was proper, and it is charged that the defendant conspired at the presentation of this bill.

"The prosecution contends that no contract was made, and that just as was a dummy for somebody else; that he never did the work, and the bill was false in that respect.

"You have heard the testimony of builders who were called as to the value of the work done, and you have heard the testimony of the defendant's witnesses, who claim that the value of the work was $11,400. The difference is small—the bill cannot be considered extravagant.
